Streszczenie pracy (max 1400 znaków)	The main aim of research carried out in this dissertation was the analysis of the time trends of migration processes, which was studied on the example of a rural community. The research were conducted in Babica village, located near Rzeszów. The first studies on emigration from this region were conducted in the Interwar Period by Krystyna Duda-Dziewierz. She presented the conclusions of her studies in the book: Village of Malopolska and the American Emigration. The research of Duda-Dziewierz covered the whole village, she collected information about all households. It makes possible to apply the diachronic approach, analyzing the emigration from this region from its beginning till present day. In the dissertation, migration process was analyzed on micro-social and micro-historical scale. The research covered the individuals, families and local communities. The analysis was carried out on few levels: 1) in terms of synchronous approach – comparing the migration of many villages at the same time, 2) in terms of diachronic approach – comparing the migration of Babica over the centuries, 3) in a wider context of migration: the region and from the Polish lands (general information), 4) a comparison of all local ethnic groups inhabiting the Strzyzów district at the turn of the century. The analysis was carried out on the basis of theoretical concepts, such as invention of tradition, transformations of ethnicity in terms of migration (invented ethnicity), institutional ethnic completeness and transformation of identity in terms of migration, segmented assimilation, transnationalism, and chain migrations.
